PREFACE

There was perhaps a time when scholars had sharper memory and could, therefore, easily retain all that they studied themselves or heard once from the mouth of the teacher. Such persons did not require any external help to find out any reference in any book. It also might have been a fact that the much more specialised nature of their study did not present to them any opportunity when they could have felt any need for hunting up any reference in any book not studied before. Thus, the need for having a list, at the end of the book, giving in brief all the references of the subjects, names, etc., dealt with in that particular book, was not felt by them. But the time has entirely changed, and what the great Naiyāyika, Udayanācārya had said centuries ago, seciiis to have been accomplished gradually. The retentive faculty of the present day scholars is no longer so fine and they are not self-sufficient. They feel the need of external sources for acquiring knowledge. Hence, it has almost become necessary to give in brief the references of the subjects, names, etc., found in a particular book, so that the reader can easily find out any reference which he needs in that book.

" जन्मसंस्कारविद्यादेः शक्तेः स्वाध्यायकर्मणोः । ह्रासदर्शनतो ह्रासः सम्प्रदायस्य मीयताम् ॥ "

There is not the least doubt that the task of preparing an exhaustive Index of even a small book is very tedious and monotonous. It taxes the patience of the Index-maker. But it is also a fact that without an Index the book remains entirely in dark. It is an important aspect of a publication which can neither be overlooked nor can its importances be ever minimised. Without an Index it is not possible to recollect the references of the topics or of important words occurring in the book. It is not easy for a reader to find out all the references of a particular book even after he has gone through it. Really speaking without an Index a book is worthless. The addition of an Index makes the study of the book easier and saves much of the time of the reader. In fact, it may be said to be (" प्रदीपः सर्वविद्यानाम "—a lamp to illuminate the treasures hidden within the two covers of the book.

Realising the importance of an exhaustive Index the late Mahamahopadhyaya Dr. Sir Ganganatha Jha asked me to prepare an Index to his English translation of the Shabara-Bhasya published in the Gaekwad's Oriental Series. The printing of the English translation was complete in 1936, but I could not finish my work in time. So the work had to be published without an exhaustive Index. Dr. Jha had, however, added a brief Index to each volume. Soon after I also finished my work but, due to some reason or other, we did not like it to be sent to the Gaekwad's Oriental Series Office at that time. Hence, it remained with me for some years in manuscript form. It was in 1943 that I made a casual reference to this to the General Editor of the above mentioned Series, and he very kindly agreed to include it in the Series.

I have tried to be as exhaustive as possible and now it is for the scholars to judge how far my efforts are successful. The references given here refer to the pages of the English translation.

With these few words I lay this small booklet before the scholars and hope they will find it a useful companion to the English translation of the Shabara-Bhasya by the late Dr. Jha.

It is my duty to express my thanks to the General Editor of the Series for having kindly included this booklet in the Series.
